What is a gummy smile? A gummy smile, also known as excessive gingival display, is the term used to describe a smile that reveals a disproportionate amount of gum above the upper teeth. This can affect the balance and appearance of your smile, making the teeth look shorter and the gums more prominent. Treatment procedure: muscle relaxant injectables. This image was taken approximately 2 weeks following the procedure. Click here to understand more about your treatment. What are the most common causes of gummy smiles? Hyperfunction of the upper lip (the lip pulls too high when smiling) A short upper lip Abnormal dental eruption (teeth appear short as they remain partially covered by gum tissue) Teeth that are small relative to the gum due to genetics or wear How can a gummy smile be treated? 1 Periodontal gum lift Periodontal surgery, known as a "gum lift", can be performed in the dental chair in just one appointment by a periodontist (gum specialist). One gum lift technique uses laser to reduce the height of the gums and/or even out an asymmetrical gum line, exposing more tooth structure for a beautiful, full smile. 2 Muscle relaxant injectables Muscle relaxant injectables can also be used to treat gummy smiles, where the muscles in the top lip pull the lip up over the top of the teeth showing an abnormal amount of the gums. Small injections to a specific muscle on either side of the nose can reduce the movement of the upper lip, helping to expose a balanced amount of teeth when smiling.
