A productive dentist is one who enjoys the balance his/her career offers, and one who offers superior patient care and staff management. In light of this, I'll attempt to summarise the reasons why my entire team and I believe we can all be more "productive" in a bigger practice. In a larger dental practice: • Due to cost sharing across a group of dentists, it is far more manageable to purchase and maintain technological equipment such as CEREC , lasers , digital radiology, dental microscopy, 3D imaging, and the latest advances in audiovisual and computer applications. • With reduced overheads, the proficiency of the business will mean lower dental fees for the general public without income diminution for the clinicians. • Informal group interaction is more dynamic, social events are more memorable and friendships are formed across a broad base of individuals. The pleasure of observing your team positively interacting in the hustle and bustle of a busy day's work fills you, as principle of the practice, with a sense of achievement that is hard to match. • Employing multiple nursing, reception and management staff may give you some administrative challenges but also brings some undeniable advantages: 1 The need for temporary agency staff is removed because, in almost all cases, contingency staffing is available from within your own infrastructure. 2 Auxiliary staff will educate, train, mentor and manage each other, freeing you from the endless cycle of training new junior staff. 3 Training more than one dental assistant in the particularities of each clinician allows for smoother succession at times of auxiliary staff sickness, annual leave and family planning. 4 Your management team will formulate new ideas and constantly enhance the existing procedural, administrative and patient management systems within your practice, thus releasing more precious time for you personally. 5 In the event that staff temporarily or permanently leave your practice, the gap is more readily filled in a larger team with a sound foundation of effective delegation. In a small practice the adverse effects of such losses are far more tangible and at times irreversible. Read Part 2 here .
