If you regularly play any kind of contact sports, wearing a well-fitted mouth guard is imperative if you want to protect your teeth. Mouth guards help to protect your pearly whites in the following ways: Mouth guards protect against knocked out teeth Mouth guards protect against soft tissue injuries Mouth guards protect against tooth displacement Mouth guards protect against tooth fractures What type of mouth guard should I use? There are two common types: over-the-counter (boil and bite) mouth guards; and professionally made, custom-fitted mouth guards. The Australian Dental Association (ADA) strongly recommends wearing a custom-fitted mouth guard to ensure maximum protection, which your Smile Solutions dentist can fit you for. What are the differences between the two types of mouth guards? Custom-fitted mouth guards Custom-fitted mouth guards are made by your dentist, who takes an impression and creates a plaster model of your teeth. This procedure of custom-fitting allows your dentist to accurately assess your mouth and provide the best fitting mouth guard that is most appropriate for you. Custom-fitted mouth guards provide a better and more comfortable fit than over-the-counter varieties, and will also ensure that it won't shift around, fall out or restrict your breathing. Over-the-counter mouth guards Over-the-counter mouth guards are far less effective than custom-fitted mouth guards. This is due to the fact that they are stock mouth guards that do not require fitting; instead, they are simply placed in hot water and then self-fitted by biting into the mould. This creates an imperfect fit. How should I look after my mouth guard? Always rinse your mouth guard in cold water after use and occasionally rinse it in mouthwash; Store in a rigid plastic container; Keep out of direct sunlight as mouth guards can change shape in high temperatures; Have your mouth guard assessed by your dentist at your regular dental check-up; and Should your mouth guard sustain damage in any way be sure to replace it.
